Food and wine and parties all over

CW couldn't choose which party to go to. So we went to both. At opposite ends of the city last Thursday night all things food and wine were being celebrated. In the Crown Towers lobby, Neil Perry was dishing up exquisite fare in his plush new digs aptly named T.W.R (The Waiting Room). The shoebox-sized space was packed with personalities including foodie greats Michael Harden and Hilary McNevin. At Bourke Street's Street headquarters the first eight graduates of the hospitality program were being thrown a party. The social enterprise helps encourage kids off the streets and into the hospitality sector with support, training and delicious hawker-style street food. CW felt spoilt rotten as we ran from the last venue before we turned into pumpkins.
